

Montevallo is Ideal

The opportunity of the railway connection which Birmingham received, contending for state capitol, one of the earliest trading centers of the state – but instead of the bustling, booming, metropolis that it might have been Montevallo remains the quiet, reserved, and sophisticated town, that is fitted for its historical and romantic background.

Whatever those townspeople, who refused to accept the railroad connections because of its noisiness, had in view, and however fate may have played a hand in carrying the State capitol to Tuscaloosa at that time, it remains a fact that Montevallo is an ideal place for a college.
